procedure for commencing civil proceedings in the magistrates' court; (b) The requirement to consult each other "relevant authority" and adjoining authorities where an order specifies neighbouring areas, demonstrates that it is not contemplated that penal sanctions be imposed; (c) Criminal sanctions are found in Part I of the 1998 Act under the heading "Crime and Disorder: general" which covers prohibitions on sex offenders (section 2) and "Crime and disorder strategies" (section 5) thus emphasizing the preventative nature of the provisions; (d) Prosecutions are not conducted by the Crown Prosecution Service.

The categorization for what constitutes a criminal offence formulated in Customs and Excise Comrs v City of London Magistrates' Court [2000] I WLR 2020 should be adopted. On that basis applications for anti-social behaviour orders involve none of the hallmarks of a criminal matter; there is no formal accusation, made on behalf of the state or by any private prosecutor, that a defendant has committed a breach of the criminal law.

There is no relevant or viable concept of "quasi-criminal" in respect of hearsay evidence, although there may be varying standards of the civil standard of proof. That is a wholly different matter to a "quasi-criminal" approach to matters of admissibility of evidence.

If applications under the 1998 Act for an anti-social behaviour order are civil in nature, the decision of the High Court in Clingham is final and no right of appeal lies to the House of Lords, as section I(1)(a) of the Administration of Justice Act 1960 only permits an appeal from a decision of the High Court "in any criminal cause or matter".

Charles Garside QC and Peter Cadwallader for the Chief Constable of Greater Manchester. Applications for anti-social behaviour orders are civil proceedings. Any proceedings for the breach of an order are criminal proceedings. It was the intention of Parliament that applications for anti-social behaviour orders should be civil proceedings. That result was effected by section 1 of the 1998 Act.

Criminal proceedings are begun by arrest, charge and production at court or by laying an information followed by summons or warrant. Applications for anti-social behaviour orders are begun by complaint. That is the method for commencing civil proceedings in magistrates' courts: see Part 2 and sections 51 and 52 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980. Botross v Hammersmith and Fulham London Borough Council (1994) 93 LGR 268 It concerned section 82(1) of the was a case with special facts. Environmental Protection Act 1990. The Act and that section had a long legislative history going back to 1875. It had been decided in many cases that the nature of such proceedings was criminal, in part, because the The court concluded that when sanctions available included a fine. Parliament enacted the 1990 Act it had made a mistake in legislating for such proceedings to be begun by complaint and had never intended to change the nature of such proceedings.

The procedure for applications for anti-social behaviour orders (section 1(2) of the 1998 Act) and sex offender orders (section 2(2) of the Act) are identical. Applications for sex offenders orders are civil proceedings: see  $B \ \nu$  Chief Constable of Avon and Somerset Constabulary [2001] I WLR 340.